

Dalhia Cavazos

Birds inspire me to look at the world from a different viewpoint. Their size and ability to fly allows them to go where it would be difficult for a person to get to. They capture my imagination and represent vulnerability with glorious freedom.

Color and texture are a driving force in the art Dalhia creates. Born in Fort Lee, Virginia; she grew up everywhere and nowhere. A military brat childhood inspired a love of color through exposure to many international and regional cultures. Because of this exposure, she grew up not being afraid of what is different. She learned to look at things from the inside and outside. Her mobile childhood was also influential in developing her creativity and vivid imagination as tools to cope with change and loss.

Intrinsically motivated by an unrelenting need to express and create. Her art is physical evidence of her evolution through exploration. Her paintings invite the observer to see the world through her eyes. Working with water media she investigates motion, color, texture, and imagery. She explores each medium's visual qualities and handling characteristics. The water media includes watercolor, ink, gouache, pastel, charcoal, and pencil.
